Thousands, if not millions, of rock 'n' roll fans around the world were disappointed at the beginning of August to hear the news that Aerosmith would no longer be touring.

Singer Steven Tyler had not been able to recover fully enough from the fractured larynx he suffered in September 2023 to perform the usual two-hour-plus concerts the band had delighted their fans with for decades.

Tyler had sustained the injury in one of those shows, simply slipping and falling throat-first onto a railing. It had been thought that his voice could rebound enough to once again lead the Boston band on yet another triumphant world tour, culminating in a New Year's Eve blast in
